I am AngryLatina, a Venezuelan-Canadian visual artist and fine art photographer based in Montréal. My work explores the surreal and the intimate, often through black-and-white film photography, self-portraiture, and handmade interventions like masks and collages. Drawing inspiration from pre-Columbian Venezuelan artifacts, Catholic iconography, and the mundane rituals of womanhood, my practice investigates the emotional residue of trauma, femininity, and displacement.

After a three-year hiatus, I have returned to my practice with renewed clarity and commitment.

Working primarily with analog formats—including large-format and medium-format film—I embrace slowness, imperfection, and process as integral parts of both healing and image-making.

As an emerging artist reconnecting with the creative world, I am also committed to building an artistic community—especially among Latino and women-identifying artists navigating diasporic identity. My goal is to continue creating work that challenges historical narratives while grounding itself in personal and lived experience.
